In Thirteen Hours, O'Brien introduces workaholic Dana Watts, who has only had sex once, and Laurel Stanley, a very hot stripper. It's Dana's birthday, a Friday night, and knowing she would be working late, one of her friends has sent Laurel to entertain her. What happens next is a claustrophobic's worse fear: Dana and Laurel are trapped in an elevator which has broken down.

O'Brien uses the thirteen hours wisely as she shows the varied aspects of her protagonists. Each starts out somewhat disdainful of the other, but through a very erotically hot game of "Truth or Dare," Dana and Laurel come to know and appreciate each other.

Meghan O'Brien has given her readers some very steamy scenes in this fast paced novel. Thirteen Hours is definitely a walk on the wild side, which may have you looking twice at those with whom you share an elevator.
